About the Lecture

While the growth of Islamic financial industry during its short history has been impressive, there is a general feeling that Islamic finance has failed to fulfil the social and ethical goals of Shari'ah. In order to comprehend the criticisms labelled against the industry, there is a need to have a clear understanding of the notion of 'ethics' in Islamic thought in general and Islamic economics and finance in particular.

After presenting the Islamic legal methodology of ethics and its implications for the financial sector, the lecture will critically examine the practice of Islamic finance in light of the ethical and moral considerations.

While the practice of Islamic finance focusses on legal compliance, the ethical dimensions of Shari'ah are ignored. This approach can lead to cases in which Islamic financial practices may be Shari'ah compliant from legal perspective, yet turn out to be unethical. There is a need to reorient Islamic finance to reflect its ethical, moral and legal dimensions.
